Pitzer Takes D4D Letter to an Elected Official Competition to "Inside-Out Prison Exchange" Classes

By Tessa Hicks Peterson, Pitzer College

"This letter writing personally motivated me to voice my opinion and to get others to voice theirs in order to push legislative agendas that are important to us as inmates... because mass incarceration is out of control and legislation can make a difference. It's important to try to push things forward with these assemblymen and try to make a difference. I plan on getting involved with policy organizations and giving back when I get out." (MJ, inside student)

During the Fall 2017 semester, Pitzer College decided to introduce a new twist to our usual participation in the Project Pericles "Letter to an Elected Official" national letter writing competition. The letters would be written in prison, by prisoners, about prison (continued at the end).

National Office News:

Debating for Democracy (D4D) Students Protect the Hudson River from Oil Tankers

Rowan Lanning ('18) and Christina Thomas ('19), Pace University, won the 2017 D4D Letters to an Elected Official competition for their letter seeking to halt the use of the Hudson River as an anchorage for oil tankers, a practice the Coast Guard had proposed without consultation with local communities or developing an environmental impact study. In collaboration with Representative Jerrold Nadler (D-NY), the Pace University D4D team ran a successful campaign to protect the Hudson River from the threat of oil spills. Thanks to the work of Christina, Rowan, and many others, the Coast Guard withdrew its proposal to permit anchorages for oil tankers. The Coast Guard appointed the students as official observers for its Port and Waterway Safety Assessment meetings held in November.

"In light of these recent and exciting developments [the withdrawal of the Coast Guard's proposal], we are left in the unexpected position of ... being able to declare victory.... We are thrilled to continue on [with] this exciting experience and appreciate your [Project Pericles'] ... support." -Rowan Lanning, Pace University ('18)

The Reed College Team Met with Senator Jeff Merkley (D-OR) and Oregon State Senator Kathleen Taylor (D-21) as part of their work on Federal and State Legislation to protect students from sexual assault. Leilani Ganser ('19) spoke with Senator Merkley about the health care needs of sexual assault survivors and is working with Senator Merkley's office to introduce a bill that amends FERPA (Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act) to classify sexual assault as a public health issue that must be included on transcripts (the bill proposed in their letter). The team is also working with Oregon State Senator Kathleen Taylor and a representative from Oregon Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum's office to lower the state standard of evidence in Title IX investigations to a "Preponderance of the Evidence" standard.

For the D4D Letter to an Elected Official Competition Leilani Ganser ('19) and Sonya Morud ('19) wrote "A Letter in Support of the Safe Transfer Act" (would require post-secondary institutions to disclose sex offenses on students' transcripts) to Representative Earl Blumenauer (D-OR).

About D4D - The Debating for Democracy National Conference features a Legislative Hearing in which teams of students compete for $5,000 in prize money by presenting in front of a panel of former government officials. The teams use the awards to develop advocacy and educational campaigns focused on their issues. In 2017, a panel of three judges- Constance Berry Newman, Martha Kanter, and Ruth Messinger-selected Pace University as the winner of the D4D Letters to an Elected Official Competition. The winning team received $3,000 to move their issue forward and the finalist teams each will receive $500. In this issue, we provide updates on the Pace University and Reed College teams. Berea College, Carleton College, and Swarthmore College were the other 2017 finalists. We provided updates on Berea and Carleton in the Fall 2017 Newsletter and will highlight Swarthmore in the future.

Project Pericles Highlighted in The Chronicle of Higher Education

In his recent Chronicle of Higher Education overview of civic engagement, Michael Anft discussed the work of Project Pericles. For the piece, Anft interviewed Project Pericles Executive Director Jan R. Liss as well as Project Pericles Program Directors from Goucher College and Pitzer College.

"Project Pericles encourages colleges to map out their civic offerings and to find gaps by measuring them against those of other member institutions. 'We're getting more and more inquiries from colleges asking, 'How do we get this started?'" says Ms. Liss. 'We're really starting to get some serious traction on this.'"

"The goal isn't limited to campus activism, community work, or courses, she says. It's to tie them all together into a cohesive strategy geared to each campus."

We are pleased that The Chronicle is focusing on civic engagement. In collaboration with all of our member colleges and universities, we look forward to having a strong voice in the evolving national discussion about the critical role of civic engagement in safeguarding our democracy. The article is available online and appeared in the January 12 print edition.

D4D on the Road™ Prepares Student Leaders for Activism

The 2017-2018 Debating for Democracy (D4D)TM workshops resumed on January 20 at Macalester College with Carleton College visiting and on January 27 at Hendrix College with the University of Central Arkansas visiting. We are pleased to partner with Midwest Academy for 2017-2018. D4D workshops provide both novice and seasoned activists with the skills they need to develop advocacy and education campaigns through effective messaging to policymakers, community leaders, and the public. Workshops are open to students, faculty, staff, alumni, and community members. During the D4D on the RoadTM workshops, seasoned organizers and activists walk participants through the critical steps in running successful campaigns to win on important issues.

From the evaluations and surveys from the 2016-2017 D4D on the Road workshops, we know that our students are concerned with Climate Change, Education Access, Immigration Reform, LGBTQ Rights, Mass Incarceration, and Race and Inequality. We are using these topics to teach students tools to enable them to become more active citizen and effective advocates on issues of concern.

Following the January 20 workshop at Macalester, The Mac Weekly featured front page coverage of the workshop. "People care about lots of issues, and I think you hear [it] at the walk-in, etc.," [Macalester College Civic Engagement Center (CEC) Outreach Coordinator Derek] Johnson [said], "but how do you continue to work on these things? This is giving [students] a toolbox, a framework, and some skills."

For Hannah Whipple [Macalester College] '21, [the trainer Jhatayn] Travis' experience as an activist was a major highlight of the training.

"I think my favorite part of it was seeing her real-life examples," Whipple said. "After she told us about all these strategies, she walked us through a specific campaign that she went through and then she showed us a video to succinctly wrap it up. I really appreciated that."

New Project Pericles Board Members, Lou Martarano and Jim Mullen

Please join me in welcoming Louis (Lou) A. Martarano and James (Jim) H. Mullen Jr. as Project Pericles' newest board members - Lou and Jim were elected to the Project Pericles Board of Directors at our December meeting. With their expertise, insight, and wisdom, we are very pleased to have both of them join the board. Jim, President of Allegheny College, will serve in an ex officio capacity as a representative of the Project Pericles Presidents' Council. Biographies for Lou and Jim can be found at the end.

Periclean Faculty Leaders - Changing the Civil Discourse on Campus

This fall, we launched a second round of the Periclean Faculty Leadership (PFL) ProgramTM on 13 campuses. The PFL Program is a leadership and course development program dedicated to incorporating civil discourse, civic engagement, and social responsibility across the undergraduate curriculum.

The Periclean Faculty Leadership (PFL) ProgramTM encourages faculty members in a wide range of disciplines to create and teach courses that address issues of social concern, enrich the curriculum, and enhance student engagement. Periclean Faculty Leaders (PFLs) from the first cohort are serving as mentors to the 2017-2018 PFL cohort. The PFL Program is supported by The Arthur Vining Davis Foundations and the Eugene M. Lang Foundation.

16 Periclean Faculty Leaders taught courses from a wide range of disciplines: Archaeology and Classical Studies, Business Law, Computer Science, Dance, English, Environmental Studies, History, Mathematics and Statistics, Psychology, Sociology, Theatre, and Urban Studies. Their syllabi have joined the 100 other courses incorporating civic engagement on our website.

On January 25, four Periclean Faculty Leaders presented, "From Curriculum To Community: Encouraging Faculty and Students To Change The World" as part of the Association of American Colleges and Universities (AAC&U) 2018 Annual Meeting. Joining Jan R. Liss, Project Pericles Executive Director, on stage to talk about their experiences were Periclean Faculty Leaders from Goucher College, New England College, Skidmore College, and Swarthmore College.

Phong Le, Assistant Professor of Mathematics in the Center for Data, Mathematical and Computational Sciences, Goucher College and Lynne Steuerle Schofield, Associate Professor of Statistics, Swarthmore College, spoke about the benefits for their students of incorporating civic engagement into their math and statistics courses. Lynne also provided data on how courses with civic engagement components are attracting students who might not otherwise take math or statistics classes.

Alex Picard, Associate Professor of Theatre, New England College talked about what a powerful experience writing and producing an original play on current social issues had been for her students and the entire New England College community. Students used the course to channel their concerns with the current political climate by working for positive change. Picard described her course as fundamentally changing the civil discourse on campus. After class, discussions continued in the dining and residence halls.

Finally, Nurcan Atalan-Helicke, Assistant Professor in Environmental Studies and Sciences, Skidmore College discussed her students' work to measure the college's scope 3 greenhouse gas emissions, with a focus on emissions generated by study abroad programs, and developing plans to mitigate the campus's environmental impact.

AAC&U and CIC - Project Pericles at National Meetings

Project Pericles presented at AAC&U as part of their Pre-Meeting Symposium, "The Power of Civic Engagement-Across Campus, Within Communities, Beyond Borders". Our panel was one of the "sessions highlighting our [AAC&U's] key partners." We were pleased to be a co-sponsor along with Campus Compact and Imagining America.

For our panel, "Incorporating Civic Engagement and Social Responsibility in the Classroom, on Campus, and in the Community," Project Pericles Program Directors discussed how we collaborate across the consortium and advance civic engagement. They each highlighted one of our programs, Creating Cohesive Paths to Civic Engagement, Creating Curricular Coherence, Debating for Democracy (D4D)[™], and the Periclean Faculty Leadership (PFL) Program[™]. Presenting with Jan R. Liss, Executive Director, Project Pericles were Darby K. Ray, Director, Harvard Center for Community Partnerships and Donald W. & Ann M. Harvard Professor of Civic Engagement, Bates College; Karin Trail-Johnson, Associate Dean, Institute for Global Citizenship and Director, Civic Engagement Center, Macalester College; Ella Turenne, Assistant Dean for Community Engagement, Occidental College; ; and Christian Rice, Assistant Dean for Civic Engagement and Director, Bonner Leader Program and UCARE, Ursinus College.

The Council of Independent Colleges (CIC) invited Project Pericles to present at their 2017 Institute for Chief Academic and Chief Student Affairs Officers in San Antonio, Texas. We discussed our work as part of Creating Cohesive Paths to Civic Engagement, the three-year initiative that spurred member institutions to inventory, map, and strengthen civic engagement across the curriculum. Joining Jan R. Liss on the panel were Chad Berry, Academic Vice President and Dean of the Faculty, Berea College; Yolanda Williams Page, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Dillard University; and Jenna Templeton, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Chatham University. The session was chaired by Mark Schneider, Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean, Ursinus College.

Creating Cohesive Paths to Civic Engagement was a project to reconceptualize the organization and integration of programming for civic engagement and social responsibility on 26 Periclean campuses. With support from the Eugene M. Lang Foundation and The Teagle Foundation, member colleges and universities inventoried, mapped, strengthened, and developed more cohesive and integrated civic engagement programs to enable students in all disciplines to incorporate civic engagement into their courses of study. In our 2017 White Paper Creating Cohesive Paths to Civic Engagement: Five Approaches to Institutionalizing Civic Engagement by Garret S. Batten, Project Pericles; Adrienne Falcón, Carleton College; and Jan R. Liss, Project Pericles we discuss insights from this multi-campus project.

Campus Pursue Greater Institutionalization of Civic Engagement Through Collaboration

Representatives of the three campuses (Macalester College, Morehouse College, and Widener University) participating in Creating Curricular Coherence through Inquiry-Based and Thematic Pathways (2017-2020) and Project Pericles met in Washington, D.C. in conjunction with AAC&U's 2018 Annual Meeting. All three teams reported making considerable progress on their projects which are exploring different but allied approaches to creating greater coherence in the undergraduate curriculum.

Macalester College has held a series of meetings and workshops with the History and Geography departments, including a "Deep Dive" where the departments met together, as they work to further integrate civic engagement and community-based learning into the departments' approaches to instruction using a pathway or scaffolded approach.

Morehouse recently passed significant changes to its general education requirements. As part of Creating Curricular Coherence, Morehouse held a series of faculty development workshops to assist faculty as they redesign courses.

Widener solicited proposals for redesigned courses that will be included in its new, interdisciplinary sustainability pathway and made 14 mini-grants to support faculty course development.

Creating Curricular Coherence is a faculty-led initiative that involves comprehensive reviews of the curriculum. These are ambitious undertakings that will redefine undergraduate education at each institution for years to come. Funded by a $225,000 grant from The Teagle Foundation and with support from the Eugene M. Lang Foundation, three institutions are streamlining their curricula using civic engagement and community-based learning as catalysts in their efforts. Macalester is piloting pathways in Geography and History with plans to expand their efforts. Morehouse and Widener are redesigning their curriculum with an emphasis on inquiry-based learning. Morehouse is using questions about the African diaspora to help shape its work while Widener is focusing on sustainability. In 2019, all Periclean campuses will be invited to a convening where we will discuss insights and best practices on curricular organization, streamlining, and institutional change.

Building Campus-based Student Task Forces

Comprised of student-led task forces on our member campuses, Student Choices - Student Voices (SCSV) encourages civic participation by hosting an array of events and activities about national issues for students and community members.

SCSV activities on campus are in full swing. Wagner College held a political film screening and voter registration event featuring films exclusively produced by Wagner students. Each film included a Q&A with the audience and filmmakers which initiated valuable conversations about current events. At Ursinus College, a student moderated an election panel on campus and reported "a great turnout and the students were very engaged." Macalester College students assisted with voter registration at the Civic Engagement Center and are now collaborating with BallotReady to collect information to support the 2018 election.

This fall, we released a SCSV guidebook and regular newsletter for student task forces working on voter registration and political engagement.

Project Pericles would like to extend a warm welcome to our new Pericleans Presidents and Provosts.

Whitman College Receives Large Grant from Mellon Foundation for Community-Based Teaching

The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation awarded Whitman College an $800,000 grant to support ongoing and new initiatives related to community-based teaching and research, with a special emphasis upon increasing diversity and inclusion across campus. The grant will support, among other things, a faculty director position to guide and support community-based learning efforts across campus, faculty support for CBL pedagogy, community outreach, and new initiatives to develop themed curricular clusters based in experiential learning and community engagement.

Whitman has made significant progress to deepen relationships with the Native American groups living in the region. In May, the college signed a historic memorandum of understanding (MOU) with the nearby Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation (CTUIR). The MOU lays out a plan for streamlining communication between Whitman and the Tribes and will be the platform for various types of community engagement activities, including an anticipated "Semester on the Reservation" program.

Noah Leavitt (Director of Whitman's Student Engagement Center) and Jason Pribilsky (Prof. of Anthropology and Chair of the Social Sciences and Project Pericles Program Director) hosted an event for tribal stakeholders and Whitman faculty and staff called "Realizing the MOU." The event served as a knowledge exchange between the institutions. Over a day of programming, both groups shared key initiatives, ending with a brainstorming session to identify potential future collaborations between CTUIR and Whitman faculty and students.

Project Pericles Board Member Biographies (continued from National Office News)

Louis (Lou) A. Martarano has significant financial, managerial, educational, and board experience. He led groups in the United States and Europe in the financial services industry and is involved in higher education. He is the Director overseeing Penn State's prestigious Science BS/MBA accelerated joint degree program. For the Yale University Alumni Non-Profit Alliance (YANA), he is a board member, Vice President, and serves on the Executive Committee. He has served as Board of Trustees member (2002 to 2011) and Chair (2011 to 2013) for Marymount Manhattan College.

Lou came to know Theresa Lang and Gene Lang through his service at Marymount. He attended our 2017 D4D National Conference to see the five finalist teams present at the legislative hearing.

Starting his financial services career at Kidder Peabody & Co. in 1981, he was a specialist in the energy, environmental and infrastructure industries managing transactions to successful completion. Lou was recruited in 1992 by Merrill Lynch to take a leading role in its project finance business, eventually establishing and managing its London Project Finance Group in 1997.

Lou received a Master's Degree in Public and Private Management from the Yale School of Management. He earned a Bachelor of Science degree in chemistry with honors from The Pennsylvania State University, where he serves as Chair of the Dean's Advisory Board and on its Development Committee. He currently serves on the Advisory Board of Penn State's Palmer Art Museum, which he has also chaired.

James (Jim) H. Mullen, Jr. became the 21st president of Allegheny College in 2008. With more than 30 years of experience in leadership roles in higher education, and a keen appreciation for Allegheny's history and traditions, he is continuing the work of earlier presidents in building community while at the same time enhancing the College's reputation as one of the nation's preeminent colleges of the liberal arts and sciences.

Dr. Mullen's tenure, Allegheny celebrated its bicentennial and also publicly launched the largest comprehensive fundraising campaign in College history, both in 2015. In addition, one of his key initiatives has been the establishment of the national Allegheny College Prize for Civility in Public Life, which was created in 2011 to annually recognize two political figures, one liberal and one conservative, who argue passionately but with civility for their beliefs. In 2017, the Allegheny College Prize for Civility in Public Life in Pennsylvania was awarded at the state level for the first time.

Dr. Mullen has served as chair of the board of directors of the American Council on Education (ACE), the nation's most visible and influential higher education association with a base of more than 1,800 member institutions. He continues to serve ACE as a representative of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities (NAICU), which represents more than 1,000 private nonprofit institutions of higher learning on higher education policy issues with federal and state governments. Dr. Mullen also serves as chair of the board of directors of the Great Lakes College Association (GLCA) and as vice president of the North Coast Athletic Conference (NCAC).

Dr. Mullen also serves on boards for the Pennsylvania Economy League of Greater Pittsburgh and the Meadville Medical Center.

In addition to his leadership roles in higher education and civic organizations, Dr. Mullen has been a sought-after lecturer in public policy and civility in public discourse, where his work focuses on the American presidency, as well as history and political science. Dr. Mullen is a Magna Cum Laude graduate of the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Massachusetts. He holds a master of public policy degree from the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University and a doctorate in higher education from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Pitzer Takes D4D Letter to an Elected Official Competition to "Inside-Out Prison Exchange" Classes (continued from Featured Article).

By Tessa Hicks Peterson, Pitzer College

To explain, let me provide a bit more information about Pitzer College and the unusual kind of community engagement it practices that has led it to partner with prisons. Pitzer was founded in 1963 as an experimental liberal arts college influenced by social reform movements with deep roots in American progressivism and a commitment to the founding ideas of participation and community. Given its mission and values, it is unsurprising to find that many of its faculty, staff, and students are deeply invested in one of the greatest social justice issues of our time: the devastating impacts that result from mass incarceration, the school to prison pipeline and the collateral damages people face while attempting people to re-enter and find success in "free" society after serving prison time. Given that 2.3 million people are incarcerated in the United States (which is five times higher than most of the countries in the world), this is an issue that impacts not just some of us, but all of us (if not by personal experience or that of our immediate community, then by the fact that all American taxpayers are complicit in upholding our current criminal justice procedures and correctional facilities by way of the industry's $26 billion annual charge to taxpayers).

In an attempt to address the need for higher education in prison and to use our engagement there to educate students about the vast injustices borne of the criminal justice system, Pitzer has been teaching a number of "inside-out prison exchange" classes in at the California Rehabilitation Center (a local men's prison) since 2014. The "Inside-Out Prison Education program" is a nationwide effort aimed at connecting "outside" students from colleges and universities with "inside" students, who are incarcerated in local prisons, for the mutual benefit of each. While this practice has been gaining steady popularity and become established at colleges and universities across the country for the last 20 years, there are fewer examples of it on the West coast. Pitzer is spearheading a trend in California to offer semester-long, dual credit-bearing shared courses by providing 12 of these courses in the last four years and securing a commitment by the entire Claremont College Consortium to teach eight of these classes annually, from an array of disciplines, into the future.

Having had the opportunity to oversee this development at the Claremont Colleges and teach annually in this program since the first pilot year, I have come to see what a profound experience this form of community engagement creates, both for inside and outside students, as well as their teachers. The array of perspectives and life experiences in the classroom infuse class discussions and theoretical analysis with a new energy and purpose. The breaking down of barriers, assumptions, fears, and biases (from all sides) is deep and on-going. Furthermore, the critical pedagogy approach that is embedded in this model and the willingness of participants to try new things as part of this learning adventure means that innovative, interactive learning occurs daily inside the most unlikely of places. Thus, the stage that was perfectly set for introducing the "Letter to an Elected Official" national letter writing competition.

The assignment was also perfectly aligned with my current course, Critical Community Studies, which explores current movements, theories, and narratives centered around critical issues in our local communities, namely education and incarceration. As such, the students needed to pull on what had sparked their interests in the readings we had done about mass incarceration, the school to prison pipeline, and pedagogies of education aiming at social change and liberation, and link these topics to current legislation. They researched local and federal legislation and found some fascinating bills surrounding incarceration and education that allowed them to connect the theoretical models they had studied to practical solutions, advocating passionately for the issues that directly impacted at least half our class. They discussed together what issues they wanted to pursue, what legislation best aligned with their interests, the additional research they'd need to do in order to substantiate their arguments, and what kind of compelling personal narratives they might include to make their letters persuasive and engaging. They worked together over seemingly insurmountable divides (based on their differing life experiences, academic levels, and the obvious distance between them that forbade any contact outside of class). Despite these challenges, they collaboratively wrote some of the most thoughtful, well-researched and impassioned letters than I have seen in my 10 years overseeing this competition. They wrote to elected officials about a range of bills concerning prison reform, bail reform and aims to reduce the recidivism rate of formerly incarcerated people as well as bills related to education, nonviolence, and peacebuilding. Through their letters, they advanced not only their own respective civic engagement abilities and interests but also used the assignment as a way to advance prison education and social change.

On the last day of class, they discussed the incredibly meaningful impact the collaborative letter-writing assignment had on them. I end with examples of this impact, as articulated in their own words:

"I consider myself a politically involved person but I had never written a letter to an elected official before. Ever. It had never been a part of my school curriculum, either. This assignment was a great example of how to teach civic engagement." (SK, outside student)

"What we are writing about are bi-partisan issues-nobody wants recidivism! There is power in somebody reading a narrative they aren't familiar with and seeing how policies are impacting people's lives. Even if it doesn't mean huge change in laws right away, it can change people's minds." (SH, outside student)

"It's one thing to have people speak for you. It's another to have your voice heard." (SA, inside student)

"This was a very cool exercise in hope. It's hard to stay hopeful in the midst of current events. This was a cool way to incorporate abstract solutions into something that is concrete-a bill that could actually be passed." (OK, outside student)

"When you come to prison, a lot of your own voice and choice is gone. Someone always tells you when, where and how. This assignment gave us an opportunity to come together and discuss what is an actual problem we are facing that we want to bring up and give voice to." (HD, inside student)

About The Debating for Democracy (D4D)TM Letter to an Elected Official Competition: The competition engages students around public policy issues, the political process, and with their elected officials. Since 2008, hundreds of teams from all Periclean colleges and universities have participated in this competition. Every year, a panel of judges with significant legislative experience selects the five winning letters written by teams of students from Periclean campuses. Winning teams are selected based on their letters and their advocacy proposals. Letters have proposed innovative solutions on a wide variety of issues including the DREAM Act, nuclear non-proliferation agreement with Iran, a national food waste management systems, the student debt crisis, and K-12 education reform. Letters are sent to elected officials throughout the United States.
