ASIAN AMERICAN STUDIES 84: NONVIOLENT SOCIAL CHANGE (cross-listed SOC84)

DESCRIPTION:

Asian American Studies emerged out of the longest student strike in the history of the United States. The third world liberation front used nonviolent social protest to call for educational relevance and greater access to higher education. With a critical analysis of oppression and imperialism, the 1968 Third World Strike led to the institutionalization of Ethnic Studies. As such, it is a natural extension that an Asian American Studies class examines the history, philosophy, and practice of nonviolent social change.

Ranging from El Salvador in the 1940s, South Africa in the 1970s, and the Philippines in the 1970s and 1980s, popular movements have contested structural inequalities through nonviolent strategies of action. This class takes a comparative racial approach to examine the history, philosophy and practice of nonviolent social change. Linking the local and global, this course draws from case studies in the United States, India, South Africa, Chile, and Vietnam.

The class opens with select historical nonviolent social movements, then it examines nonviolent philosophies, and it closes with a synthesis of students’ understanding of the history, philosophies, and practices of nonviolent social change.

Nonviolence is neither the absence of violence nor passively avoiding violence. It is an active engagement with society in order to fight for justice and freedom for all humans. Mohandas Gandhi conceptualized nonviolence as soul-force or satyagraha to mobilize Indians to challenge British colonialism in the early 1900s. Cesar Chavez and Philip Vera Cruz deployed non-violent mobilization techniques with the United Farm Workers to bring together Chicano/Latino and Filipino agricultural workers to demand better labor conditions in the 1960s. Nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize by Martin Luther King, Jr. Thich Nhat Hanh approaches nonviolence as inter-being to organize social welfare and peace campaigns during the Vietnam War. Drawing from Christian theology, Martin Luther King Jr. conceptualized nonviolence social change on the basis of agape during mass campaigns against Jim Crow laws in the racially segregated and virulent United States.

This class is based on a participatory education model and so your commitment to be an active contributor is essential to the learning process for all. The readings are in a smaller quantity but are dense theoretically. The purpose is for students to read them closely multiple times before class and to be able to extrapolate from them in class. Please bring your reading to class in order to be able to refer to it during discussions.

COURSE OBJECTIVES:
1) To compare and contrast of nonviolent social change tactics with nonviolent social change praxes
2) To introduce how social movements arise, what strategies are deployed, and how the strategies impact the outcomes
3) To further cultivate your analytical toolkit through concepts such as interbeing and satyagraha.

NOTE: The structure and content of this course is influenced heavily by Pace E Bene’s “Engage: From Violence to Wholeness” curriculum, Facing History and Ourselves curriculum, and the praxes of Michael James and Debbie Lee.

Potential projects with Chaplain Teddy Harder at Stark
- informal visits: The wards need to learn how to communicate with "civilians". Such visits could happen on a monthly or biweekly basis.
- One or more workshops put on by the Pitzer students to teach lifeskills to the wards.
- "Project Our Home, Inc."

From Chaplain Teddy Harder
“Students would do research and help the wards develop the project, strategies, coalition building and so forth. The project deals with the issues of reentry and might be a way to tie into already existing school projects. Students would meet and work with the wards at the institution and do research on campus as needed. We need some statistics to back up our claims and a student or two might be able to do some research for us. Conduct second survey of target population. Analyze survey data and compare with data set of parole violators. Integrate findings with cartographic map of social ecology. “

In 2001, the California Center for Cultural and Social Issues (CCCSI) began collaborating with faculty and student volunteers to operate a cultural enrichment program at Camp Afflerbaugh-Paige, a juvenile detention camp/high school in La Verne. Since the program's inception, CCSI has incorporated poetry and spoken word lessons into a continually developing literacy curriculum. We have since added enrichment programs in the visual and performing arts, as well as developing an organic garden, being used as an outdoor classroom.
